LANDLORD AND TENANT.
By a decision just handed out by Mr. Justice Simmons in a case tried at Calgary, a landlord is responsible for the payment of any alterations and improvements made by the tenant. The action arose out of the failure of the plaintiffs to obtain payment for work done on the Ritz cafe, Calgary, who failed. The plaintiffs then sued the landlord, and obtained judgment for sums approximately $5,000. The whole of the argument, according to the learned judge's decision, seems to have rested upon the failure of the landlord to post up a written notice disclaiming all responsibility for payment of said alterations, within three days after the landlord learns that the work is to be carried out, as the landlord is liable for work done to the interior of the premises regardless of whether he ordered it done, provided he does not post said notice. At first sight this seems an injustice to a landlord, as an unscrupulous or extravagant tenant might order a lot of expensive alterations to a building, which the landlord with reason would not wish done. And particularly might this be the case where the landlord may not realize where the property is situated, and not knowing of the nature of the alterations and not posting the three days' notice required, disclaiming his responsibility for the payment of such alterations. Yet, on the other hand, if the property is greatly improved and enhanced in value by such alterations made by the tenant, it seems only reasonable that there should be some compensation made by the landlord to the tenant for his outlay on the property. In summing up, his honor says: Erections, construction, repairs and alterations are works which the landlord is equally responsible for with the tenant for which he can be forced to pay under conditions as stated.

THE QUESTION OF BUYING AT HOME.
There is an interesting discussion going on at the present time in Calgary, owing to the management of the new Knox church purchasing some of its furnishings from a mail order house, outside the province. Speaking editorially upon the question, the News-Telegram asks pertinently: "What we desire to know from the merchants of Calgary, who are the friends of the News-Telegram, and the main support of the city of Calgary, is as to why any private individual or organization or any public body has to go to Winnipeg to secure furnishings. Can these not be secured just as cheaply in Calgary?"

In its question the News-Telegram strikes at the bottom of the whole trouble. We do not doubt but what the furnishings required for Knox church could have been obtained in Calgary, but the trouble seems to have been the great difference in the price. Are the merchants of Alberta, as a class, content with reasonable profits on their goods? It has been said, rightly or wrongly, that where from 50 to 500 per cent, is charged. Unless the merchants of Alberta are content with a reasonable profit on their goods, so long will the mail order house continue to grow fat, in spite of the columns of newspaper talk of patriotism in buying at home and building up the home town, or the frantic efforts of the clerks' associations to stem the tide of the money flowing out of the home towns. Ninety-nine per cent of the men with the ready cash in their hands are going to buy in the cheapest market—that's a chin, and its up to the wholesale houses in the west and merchants themselves to stop the cash going out to the mail order houses. Does not the wise merchant himself buy at the cheapest market?

At Donore Presbyterian church has just been celebrated the wedding of a Mr. Harper to a Miss Fidler. They certainly ought to make a harmonious duet.

Canada is rid of Thaw, for which Canadians are duly thankful. Let them fight the case out in the United States, where the whole unsavory mess had its origin.

Keep Evelyn Thaw out of Canada by all means. She is an undesirable quite as much as her husband and the Ottawa authorities should not let her pass. The way in which her performances have been featured is a disgrace to the stage.

Macleod will be a one-newspaper town for some time at least. The Advertiser and Spectator have been merged, and the Spectator will be the paper.

E. J. Fream, of the Alberta Farmers' Co-operative association says that the association will have 35 elevators ready at the end of the month to handle the grain crop of the province which is being rapidly threshed.

For assaulting John Ross of Hanley, Sask., two mounted policemen, whose names are withheld, were sentenced to four and six months' imprisonment at Lettbridge and recommended for dismissal from the force. The constables were stationed at Macleod. Inspector Tucker of that place trying them.

Serious attacks of colic and other troubles, digestive and other wise, are very often caused at this time of the year by changing the horse's feed from the old oats on to the new. This change should be made gradually, and careful attention should be given to have the old and new oats mixed until the horse becomes accustomed to the new feed. New oats are liable to cause sudden fermentation in the animal's stomach, and it is well in any event to mix the feed with bran. Serious losses sometimes result from the indiscriminate feeding of new oats.

Farmers in the southern part of the province who want the blood reserve for grazing purposes have petitioned the department of the interior to grant them a lease of the lands.

Stack Your Barley

There is always a widespread difference between the highest and lowest price paid for barley on the general market. A good deal of the barley that sells at the lower price does so simply because it is not properly cared for by the farmer. Barley is one grain that should always be stacked if it is to be sold on the market. Barley threshed from the stack and hauled from the machine to the elevator contains many kernels that are not fully mature and others that are over-mature. When put in the vat by the maltster, the green ones absorb moisture much more rapidly than the over-mature ones. Then, too, they contain a larger percentage of moisture when put in the vat. The result is that when they contain the proportion of moisture they should, for making good malt, the harder and more flinty kernels have not yet absorbed nearly enough. If the batch is taken off by the maltster then, there is a loss on the mature kernels. On the other hand, if he leaves it all in the vat until the hard kernels have absorbed the moisture necessary for the making of good malt, the softer kernels have commenced to decay. The highest priced barley is all used for malting purposes. The price for that purpose is higher or lower in proportion as the barley is desirable and will return a profit to the firm using it for the purpose of malt.

The only way to overcome this condition of unequal moisture content of the kernels is to stack the barley and let it go thoroughly through the sweat. During the process the greener the heads harden up, and the moisture content in the kernels become to a large extent equalized.

Then, too, by stacking the barley as soon as it is ready to put in stack it is not so likely to be bleached or colored. Color is an important matter, because upon its color depends the color of the beer that is made from it. Another thing which should be guarded carefully in the threshing of barley that is to be sold on the market is the breaking of the kernels. Every broken kernel of barley that goes in a malt vat moulds, and not only is of no use for that purpose, but actually deteriorates the balance of the barley used in the vat. There is no excuse for the threshing machine breaking up the kernels of barley. Barley that is dry can be threshed without setting the concaves close enough to break the kernels.

She: Well, you put some other calf's skin on your feet.

Never mind, said the cheerful idiot to a friend who was down on his luck, remember there's always one place where you can find money and sympathy.

Where? said the friend brightening up.

In the dictionary, replied the C. I. as he moved off.

Her Own Town

She Found It by Chance

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Settled in her chair in the Pullman car, Angela Long studied the time table with knitted brows. Finally she flung it aside and drew out a small railway guide. Now her actions became quite mysterious.

She closed her blue eyes and ruffled the leaves of the booklet with pink finger tips. Suddenly she slipped in a finger and opened the book. At the same time her eyes opened wide, and she looked eagerly at the schedule on the printed page.

"The X, L, S and R," she crowed. "I just knew if I left my new destination to fate it would take me to some new and interesting region. Now my finger shall run up and down the columns, and whatever station it points at, even though it be a watering tank, will find I will align and seek my adventure."

Angela closed her eyes, while her finger wandered uncertainly over the page. At last it paused, and Angela opened her eyes and looked at the printed page.

"Angela!" she gasped. "The very idea of my finger choosing a town of my own name! Well, I'll be bound! Angela station it is. I'm glad my tick et is a through one. I can branch off my late Wyoming and come to my own town."

She studied the time table carefully, consulted the attached map, made a few memorandums in her little book and then took up her railway guide. She closed eyes to dream of the past and the future.

The motherless daughter of a rich manufacturer, Angela Long had spent many years in expensive private schools, for her father wrote her a check of ten.

"Well, please," cried Angela, tossing aside her hat and veil, turning her flushed face toward her hostess, adding, "Please let me tell you how I happened to come to this town before you go any further."

"Very well, dear," and Mrs. Dexter folded her hands and sat down while Angela told the story of her life and of its awakening to poverty and the necessity for starting anew. She related when she related how she had followed the foot of her destiny to chance, and here a flood of bonnet lace drowned her speech.

"I thought of opening a millinery shop," said Angela, smiling through her tears. "I really am clever at that, but I suppose there are not many who would want to wear mine here."

"Not very many, my dear, but we will see what we can do. Wait until we get home and see."

A masculine voice sang up the stairs and announced that supper was ready.

"Come, Angela," said Mrs. Dexter, giving the girl her hand. And straightly happy in this new found friend, Angela Long went down to the dining room.

Gray Dexter gave her a pleasant greeting, and Angela remarked at the increased delight in her presence that mother and son revealed in look and word.

"I am afraid you will think I am a sort of impostor," she said after a moment's related her story to Gray's benefit.

"Tell her, mother," laughed Gray, with tender eyes on the girl's lovely face.

"My dear, it was a wonder working Providence that caused you to choose to come to Angela, for it is your own town. Listen. Five years ago Gray was working as bookkeeper in your father's factory. His health was very poor, and one day he died. It was that or death. Gray could not afford to come to the funeral, and your father interested himself in the case and advanced the money to come to the funeral. He has been very successful, and Gray has repaid all the money to your father."

"We have been most grateful to your father, but still, it is a pity that your father died in his daughter, whose picture we saw once in a society paper. He died in his daughter's name, which was changed from Green Snake. Gray was asked to resume it, and he called it Angela. After you, your daughter, the man who had given him life and happiness and success."

"I don't know," said Angela, looking at her mother. "I don't know if you had better remain with me until you decide what to do." went on Mrs. Dexter, leaving Angela to her own thoughts.

her mother will look to the north with me. My mother will look out for you until you are settled—here is, if you are going to remain."

"I will see Mrs. Henson first," agreed Angela. And she watched the man who in reality left her to her mother and deposited them on the backboard. In the minutes they were flying down the trail, leaving a white cloud of dust behind them. Both of them were very quiet during the drive. Finally they entered the town, a strange street of little houses that promised to be a new life for them.

The houses stood before a two-story house, on the porch of which sat several men smoking. They looked with interest at Angela and her companion. A strong odor of frying onions was wafted from the open front door.

Angela looked appealingly at her companion, and she smiled down at her and nodded. "Awful, isn't it?" she asked. "I reckon you better come and see my mother, isn't it?"

"Thank you, I will," said Angela gratefully, and she was surprised at the feeling of relief that followed her decision. It came up to your room; you must be very tired."

Just as she turned the corner, she found a wide gate and went rattling toward a low, comfortable ranch house on a hill, and she was surprised to find a man and a woman sitting on the porch. They were looking at her with interest, and she felt that she was being watched.

"I am afraid you will consider me an intruder," cried Angela nervously as she gave her hand to the driver and turned to the ground. "You are very kind and good."

"I am very glad to see you, my dear," interrupted Mrs. Dexter, kissing the girl gently. "After Gray has sent the money to the ground, you must be very tired."

WOMAN BECOMES A J.P.

MISS ENID G. DUNCAN FIRST OF HER KIND IN BRITAIN.

Lord Chancellor Has So Far Modified the Prejudice Against Women in Legal Positions in England as to Name "Chairman" of West Hesse Board of Guardians Power to Certify Lunatics.

Britain has been slow to grant legal office women, and for years a woman has been barred from the right of a woman to become a lawyer. Miss Christabel Pankhurst tried and was barred out, and recently a young woman used the legal profession to force them to admit her to their ranks and allow her to practice as a barrister.

Despite this objection to women lawyers, the British Government seems to be making a change.

Miss Enid G. Duncan, a woman of the name, has been named as the first woman to become a Justice of the Peace in Britain. She is now a woman of the name, and she is now a woman of the name.

BANK OF HAMILTON

Working for Others

THE man who looks into the future and pictures himself the owner of a business, will live to learn that his visions will always be dreams unless his foresight has shown him the need of saving.

Saving is not a habit that should be started "someday," but one that requires immediate action. As many days as you postpone opening a bank account, just that many more days will you be working for others.

One dollar will open a savings account with this bank, and the highest rate of current interest will be credited every six months.

It looks as though "Marquis" was going to "kilog" the wheat to be sown in this section another year.

A writer in Farm and Fireside says that the eight hour day with farmers consists of eight hours for work and eight hours for chores.

Reports are to the effect that chickens are very plentiful this year. Hunters are beginning to arrange parties to visit the favorite grounds where the game is to be found as soon as the season opens.

We regret to announce the death of the infant daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. D. Simpson of Stony Plain, and late of Stavelly Methodist circuit, which sad event occurred on Sunday, September 14th.

Mr. Drumheller, the Spokane millionaire, and owner of the C.C. ranch, Cayley, was the recent purchaser of the old Westropp winter camp ranch, west of Stavelly, and situate at the end of the construction of the new railroad, running west through the Porcupines, which will open up vast coal areas. Which Are You?

Every growing ambitious town is composed of three elements, 1. Those who work patriotically, vigorously and intelligently for its advancement; 2. Those who are in a state of apathy or indifference; 3. and those who take a curious delight in discouraging the efforts of others by ridicule, and by a persistent denial that any progress can be or has been accomplished, and by boasts of every other town besides their own. The last class are called croakers, but they are really something worse, for their opposition does not arise from despondency but from that opposite spirit that will neither act itself or suffer others to act.—Ex.

How to Keep Eggs Fresh

See that the eggs are new laid before attempting to preserve them. Assured of their freshness, dip each egg in melted mutton suet, then wipe off all superfluous grease and set the eggs small end uppermost in a box, and wedge together. Cover each layer of eggs with sawdust or bran, or better still, lime sand; nail down the lid to exclude the air. Thus treated the eggs will be equal to new laid eggs after long keeping.

Mayor Holmes of Charehosh is in Edmonton, where he will head a deputation representing the smaller towns of Alberta to protest to the government against some of the provisions of the assessment act, enacted at the last session of the legislature.

Over one thousand car loads of grain have been shipped from points in Alberta since threshing season commenced.

A "Foolish" Ship.
A true story is told of a skeptical Massachusetts captain who, way back in the early years of the republic, determined to exhibit the fallacy of the Friday superstition. He contracted on a certain Friday for the building of a ship, and it was arranged that the keel of this vessel was laid on Friday, that she was launched on a Friday, named Friday, commenced loading on a Friday and hauled into the stream on the same day of the week. To add to the possibilities of disaster, a negro cook named Friday was engaged, and, thus fully freighted with the sinister name, the Friday sailed on a Friday, bound to a port in the West Indies. From that day to this no tidings of the ill conditioned craft have been received.

Foat of Fools.
The best authorities agree that the origin of the ancient custom of celebrating a feast of fools is unknown. Some identify it with the Roman feast of fools on March 31. But why did the Romans institute the feast of fools? Is India March 21 is "the bull festival" when all manner of pranks are played upon the hoodlums. But again, where did the Hindoos get it? The French call the April fool "un poison d'Avril" (April fish). To the Scotch he is a "gaw" (a cuckoo).

Not Up on Blamp.
"I'd like to get a room for the night," drawled the old man with the chin whiskers and yellow spectacles. "By Jinks, Buttons," whispered the clerk to the bellhop, "all of the rooms are filled, but we don't want to discourage the money bringing, so we'll have to give him some kind of a stall." But the old man overheard the remark and fired up instantly. "No, you don't!" he blurted defiantly. "By crickets, not. If I wanted to sleep in a stall I'd stopped at the livery stable on the other corner."—Chicago News.

Richard Brinsley Sheridan.
Sheridan gave almost no promise in childhood of the future dramatist. His mother pronounced "Richard Brinsley" to be "the dullest and most hopeless of her sons," and he was sent home from Dr. Whyte's academy with the reputation of being an impenetrable dunce, who wrote "think" for "thing." But he must have been able to think a thing or two even in those days, for at twenty-six he had written the "School for Scandal," of which Leigh Hunt observed, "It is a very concentration and crystallization of all that is sparkling, clear and compact in the materials of pure comedy." It should, however, be mentioned that a more judicious of the youthful Sheridan's preceptors, Samuel Parr, one of the masters at Harrow, detected the latent spark of his pupil's genius and aided it by judicious cultivation.

See Korea Wife.
In Korea the rooms of a wife or mother are the sanctuaries of all who who break the law. Unless for treason or for one other crime he cannot be forced to leave those rooms, and as long as he remains under the protection of his wife's apartments he is secure from the officers of the law.

Round to the Comfortable.
An author who had been jailed for debt wrote to his wife: "I've the favor to send me my Shakespeare, my nightgown and slippers, my pipe and all letters asking for autographs and containing stamps. I want to be comfortable and at peace with the world."

A Show Photographer.
Irate Female—Look here! Do you mean to tell me that I have got such an ugly looking nose as that? Photographer—But my apparatus cannot lie, madam. Irate Female—Then, for goodness sake, go and get one that can.

Indismissibility of the Diamond.
The diamond, being pure carbon, with burn and be consumed without leaving a trace behind. The indismissibility of the diamond was not known till the middle of the nineteenth century. The ancients were firmly convinced that the diamond could not either be burned or broken. This was disproven in 1803 or thereabout, when a few karat stones were consumed in the flame of a blow pipe. I think it was in Rome. The Grand Duke of Florence in 1804 thought that fire would reveal the secret of the diamond's composition, and he caused a stone to be placed under the focus of concentrated sun rays. The diamond cracked, consumed and disappeared.—Encyclopaedia.

Meet Wall's Dead Nephew.
The streets of the old city of Venice were often extremely thick in mud, in spite of the great sewers which dated from the tenth century. Even now the thoroughfares between the Piazza and Rialto are sometimes sufficiently bad. We are writing of the time when the population was nearly five times what it now is, and when Venetian trade was at its zenith. Well, to contrast this the ladies look to high heeled shoes.

As the mud grew worse the heels became taller and taller until at length they were half a yard high and so difficult to control as a pair of stilts without handles. The consequence was that a lady in full dress, obliged to walk but a few yards, had to be supported on both sides. This was a task for the black pages or for the lavers, who had at that time become a very conventional part of Venetian society.

The Fractional Side of It.
"Father, have you read my ode 'To the Plow'?" asked the youthful poet. "No, John, I haven't," was the old man's reply. "But you just take this here as an" cut down a few of 'em. The plow is o'ra' an' 'bout ten cords of wood!"
